MEXICO CITY - More than 2,000 federal and local police have been assigned to improve security in and around Mexico City's international airport after a series of armed robberies against travelers who exchanged money there, authorities announced Monday.

Mexico City Attorney General Miguel Mancera said 400 additional city police officers have been assigned to patrol the areas surrounding the airport. Federal police have added 250 new agents to the airport since December, said Federal Police Commissioner Rod Esparza.

At least 250 people have been robbed recently outside the airport. They apparently were followed after doing business at the currency

Uruapan is one of many cities struggling with increasing drug violence. There were two other grenade attacks against police stations there in February.

More than 350 people have been killed so far this year in Mexico as drug gangs battle each other for territory and fight off a government crackdown.

In Tijuana, police arrested four associates of Teodoro Garcia Simental, a suspected drug lord and chief rival of Arellano Felix cartel leader Fernando Sanchez Arrellano. One of the four is believed to be Garcia Simental's chief recruiter, federal police said.

Mexican officials blamed the power struggle between Garcia Simental and Sanchez Arrellano for a surge in violence in Tijuana last year. In January, police arrested a man accused of disposing of hundreds of bodies for Garcia Simental by dissolving them in a corrosive material.

Esparza said police are hopeful the recent arrests will help them close in on Tijuana's top drug lords.

Also Monday, Public Safety Secretary Genaro Garcia Luna said that police are using trained dogs to search for a pit in which an Italian businessman kidnapped in June was reportedly buried after being killed by his captors.

Italian Claudio Conti was a longtime resident and business owner in the southern Pacific coast resort of Puerto Escondido. A man who allegedly helped kidnap

Conti told investigators the businessman was ordered to be killed and buried in a pit in the area.
